

We in Indiana have a wonderful No-Call list already in place that prevents telemarketers from calling homes that are registered for the list with the Attorney General's office. Personally speaking, this list has definitely improved the quality of life in our household. The invasive phone calls have stopped completely, allowing us to have more family time without annoying phone calls. If the federal government is looking into the possibility of creating a national no-call list, that is great, as long as it doesn't gut our Indiana law. Either the federal gov't. needs to honor state laws already in place or model yours after a state law that works...such as Indiana's. Please do not make a law that supersedes our state law and weakens it.
